

Dear Parishioners

This is an extract from a reflection by Lord David Alton.

"Westminster Hall is at the very heart of Britain's parliamentary democracy and it was here that former Prime Ministers, political and civic leaders, gathered to hear Pope Benedict XVI remind us that religion still has a vital role to play with our culture.

The Pope began his address by recalling "the countless men and women down the centuries who have played their part in the momentous events that have taken place within these walls and have shaped the lives of many generations of Britons, and others besides."

"In particular", he added, "I recall the figure of St Thomas More, the great English scholar and statesman, who is admired by believers and non-believers alike for the integrity with which he followed his conscience, even at the cost of displeasing the sovereign whose 'good servant' he was, because he chose to serve God first. The dilemma which faced More in those difficult times, the perennial question of the relationship between what is owed to Caesar and what is owed to God."

Pope Benedict then addressed More's dilemma of how in modern societies, men and women of conscience can be "the King's good servant but God's first":

"These questions", he said, "take us directly to the ethical foundations of civil discourse." It is not enough to live by social consensus – or opinion polls. Religious faith, he said, helps to purify and shed light on the ethics which should underpin political decisions: "Religion, in other words, is not a problem for legislators to solve, but a vital contributor to the national conversation."

Without the "corrective" role of religion, the Pope explained, "reason too can fall prey to distortions, as when it is manipulated by ideology, or applied in a partial way that fails to take full account of the dignity of the human person."

I wondered what legislators who had legalised the creation of animal human hybrid embryos, the abortion of disabled babies up to and even during birth, who had imposed party policy on previous conscience questions, such as abortion, or who had supported measures which penalise the poorest members of society, made of this call to place human dignity at the heart of the political equation.

Pope Benedict also made an explicit plea for religious toleration – and for the celebration of public holidays such as Christmas – and as well as the upholding of conscience he called for the alignment of faith and reason."

How is your Advent progressing? Have you made time for Christ?
