

Fr Luis Ruiz, SJ

From its inception, one of the principal works of the Society of Jesus had been the founding of missions, particularly in the Far East. In our times the greatest successor to St Francis Xavier, who died looking towards China, and Matteo Ricci, who first penetrated the forbidden city of Beijing, has been Fr Luis Ruiz, who after an extended lifetime of loving and giving and it must be said, merriment, died in Macao on 26th July and still working at the age of 97.

Returning home to Spain from China after the war, he passed through Macao, a tiny peninsula just west of Hong Kong, then belonging to Portugal, where he found himself surrounded by destitute men, women and children living side by side with millionaires who kept their wealth to themselves. So in the high Ignatian tradition he resolved to do something himself, and thus became the peninsula's one-man conscience and provider of social services. He founded and ran schools, hospitals, an orphanage, homes for the aged, refuges for the destitute and for lone mothers and programmes of rehabilitation for the families of refugees. As he moved ceaselessly around among the wretched and rejected he brought them love and hope and indeed laughter. When I met him in Macao he told me about a great football match he'd just been watching by the sea-side. He didn't know the score: too many goals to count! "Both goalkeepers blind!" he explained, laughing. And it wasn't a callous laugh. Fr Ruiz was someone in whose presence blindness doesn't seem to matter all that much.

You could feel his energy. He was always on the move except when asleep, and he would fall asleep suddenly and briefly at any time. He preferred the corridors of his office or his train to a bedroom: "More air, less mosquitoes." My last sight of him in Macao was a diminishing back view as he set off on a motor scooter up a very steep hill into driving rain shortly before midnight with the intention of saying mass on the frontier at 6.00am the following morning.

And two years later he crossed the frontier after receiving an appeal on behalf of a group of lepers living in utmost destitution in the Chinese Republic, which he answered instinctively and at an age at which most of us would be in deep retirement he extended his operation at a call to serve the limitless needs of the destitute and rejected of the Chinese Republic, where he eventually founded 44 leprosaria.

To all this work the rich of Macao and of the world at large gave nothing. It was all built on the generosity of small people, like us, acting on Fr Ruiz constantly repeated watch-word: "Nothing so happy as make people happy!".
